

Delegates from Seattle and Rabat come together over Social Networking and Blogging

In November 2009, WIT's Professional Development Network (PDN) in Rabat gathered with representatives from a local University and leaders from the Center for Women and Democracy in Seattle to share techniques and strategies for career development through social networking and blogging.

WIT participants began by expressing their enthusiasm for the WIT blogging training and shared how blogging has transformed their personal and professional lives. One participant remarked, "Blogging is fascinating! I work in the communication field and I use blogging as a tool for my job. It is free, easy to use and once I learned the techniques, my blog has become a great platform."

The visitors from the Center for Women in Democracy focused their presentations on successful practices in their own career development and provided the women with practical advice on professional networking, mentorship, developing a strategic vision and acquiring specialized skills. One participant commented, "the roundtable was a great opportunity for all of us to move a step ahead in the IT field and learn how to use these techniques effectively."
